When "reports of committees" were called for in the Senate yesterday Mr. E4numds arose and said: "MR. PRESIDENT, I am instructed by the committee on judiciary, to whom was referred the latter of the Attorney General, with authority to report with open doors, to make a report, with sundry resolutions, which I ask may be placed on the calcular." The President pro tempore. Does the senator desire to have them read?

Mr. Pugh. From the minority of the committee on judiciary, as to the report just made, I desire to state that they know nothing of the contents of the report until it was read to the committee this morning. The minority desire to prepare a report in which they will present their views; and, to enable them to do so, they have until Monday week within which to prepare the report; and it is understood that the majority report and the resolutions accompanying it will not be called up for consideration until we get leave to file the minority report. The time given us to do so is not to extend beyond next Monday week.

The President pro tempore. Yes.
Mr. Butler. Is it to be printed?
Mr. Edmunds. Certainly it will be printed under the rule. I ask that the report of the committee, as well as the resolutions, be printed in the Record also.

The President pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

THE RESOLUTIONS. Eredred. That the foregoing report of the committee on the judiciary be agreed to and committee on the judiciary by agreed to and adopted.

Existivel, That the Senate hereby expresses its condemnation of the refusal of the Attorney General, under whatever influence, to send to the Senate scopes of papers called for by its resolution of the Will of January, and set first in the reports of the committee on the judiciary, as in violation of his willicial duty and subvirsive of the fundamental principles of the growment and of a good administration thereof.

Resolved, That his under these circumstances, the duty of the Senate to trefuse its advice and consent to proposed removals of oilloers, the documents and papers in reference to the supposed official or personal misconduct of whom are withheld by the Executive or any head of a department when deemed necessary by the senate and called for in considering the matter. Resolved, That the provision of section 174 of the Revised Statutes, declaring "that persons benorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or slokness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such office," ought to be mithally and fully put in execution, and that to remove, or to propose to remove, any such soldier whose faithfulness, competency, and character are above reproach, and to give place to another who has not rendered such service, is a violation of the spirit of the law and of the practical gratitude the people and government of the United States owe to the defenders of constitutional liberty and the integrity of the government. All of which is respectively submitted.

Geo. F. Edutus, of. That it is under these circumstances

The report accompanying the resolutions states that on July 18, 1885, the President, pursuant to the provisions of section 1708 of the Revised Statutes, suspended George M. Duskin from the execution of the duties of the office of district attorney of the southern district of Alabama, and on the same day, pursuant to the same statute, designated John D. Burnett to perform the duties of such suspended officer in the meantime by a letter of authority. The nomination of Burnett was in due course referred to the committee on the Judiciary. Since the passage of the act of March 2, 1867, regarding the tenure of certain civil offices, it has been the practice of the committee to ask for papers and information touching the conduct of the officer proposed to be removed and the character of the person proposed to be appointed. In the person proposed to be appointed. In no instance until this time has the commitno instance until this time has the commit-tee met with any delay or denial in respect of furnishing such papers and information with a single exception, in which the delay and suggested denial lasted but two or three days. The report then reviews the subsequent action of the committee, and quotes the resolution adopted on Jan. 25, directing the Attorney General to transmit to the Senate the documents bearing on the to the Senate the documents bearing on the case, and the Attorney General's reply, to the effect that "the public interest will not be promoted by a compliance with said It then continues: This letter, although It then continues: This letter, although in response to the direction of the Senate, assumes that the Attorney General is the servant of the President, and is to give or withold copies of documents in his office, according to the will of the Executive, and not otherwise. The committee is unable to discover any law which makes the Attorney General in any sense the servant of or General in any sense the servant of or under control of the Executive in the per-formance of his lawful duties. The Exectornance of its inwith ducies. The Executive is bound by the constitution, and by his eath, to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and he is himself as much bound by the regulations of law as the humblest officer in the service of the much bound by the regulations of law as the humblest officer in the service of the United States, and he cannot have authority to undertake to faithfully execute the laws, whether applied to his own special functions or those of the departments created by law, otherwise than by causing, so far as he lawfully may, and by lawful methods, the heads of departments and other officers of the United States to do the duties which the law, and not his will, has imputed to them. The important question then is whether it is within the constitutional competence of either house of Congress to have access to the official papers and documents in the various public offices of the United States, created by laws enacted by themselves. There is no statute which commands the head of any department, excepting that of the treasury, to transmit to either house of Congress on its demand, any information whatever concerning the administration of his department; but the committee believes it to be clear that from the very nature of the powers intrusted by the very insture of the powers intrusted by the constitution to the two houses of Congress, it is a necessary incident that either bouse must have, at all times, the right to know all that officially exists or takes place in any of the departments of the government. So perfectly was this proposition understood before and at the time of the formation of the constitution, in establishing a department of foreign affairs and providing for a principal officer thereof, thought it fit to enact that all books, records, and other papers in that office should be open to the inspection of any member of Congress, provided that no copy should be taken of matters of secret nature without special leave of Congress. It was not thought necessary to enact that Congress itself should be entitled to the production and inspection of such papers, for that right was supposed to exist in the very nature of things and when, under the constitution, the department came to be created, although the provision that each individual member of Congress should have access to the papers was omitted, evidently for reasons that can now be quite well understood, it was not thought necessary that an afrimative provision should be inserted giving to the houses of Congress the right to know the contents of the public papers and records in the public offices of the country, whose laws and whose offices they were to assist in creating.

The report expresses the opinion that there is no instance of civilized governments which have hoddes representative of the people of states in which the right and power of those representative bodies to obtain in one form or another information as to every paper and transaction in any of the executive departments thereof, does not said. Even thought means michter and the contents are presentative of the people of states in which here is no instance of civilized governments which have hoddes representative of the people of states in which the right and overly apper and transaction in any of the the very nature of the powers intrusted by the constitution to the two houses of Con-to every paper and transaction in any of the executive departments thereof, does no exist. Even though such papers might re-late to what is ordinarily an executive function, if that function infringed upon any duty or function of the representative bodies, that, in very nature of things, Con-gress is entitled to these papers.

A qualification of this general right, it NAVY YARD SHOPS SHOT DOWN is stated, may, under our constitution, exist in the case of calls by the House of Representatives for papers relating to treatives, i.e., under consideration and and yet deposed of by the President and Remate. The committee, after a careful research, rates that within the foregoing limits there is scarcely, in the history of this government until new, any instance of a refusal by the head of a department, or even the President himself, to communicate official isets and information as distinguished from private and unofficial papers, motives, views, reasons, and opinious to either house of Congress when unconditionally demanded. Indeed, the early journals of the Senate show great numbers of instances of directions to the beads of departments, as of course, to fernish papers and reports upon all sorts of offices, both legislative and judicial. The instances of these requests to the beads of these requests to Over Two Hundred Men Discharged From the Omomee Department. The ordnance shops of the navy yard looked deserted yesterday, 211 of the 307 men employed there having been discharged the evening before. Nothing was known of the tetended reduction at the gard until late in the afternoon, when an order was received from the chief of the bureau of ordnance at the Navy Department. The men were accordingly greatly surprised, and were gloomy faces on the way to their

the consideration of the Senate, and for adoption, the above resolutions.

Appended to the report is a statement showing the number of suspensions by the Fresident as indicated by the nominations received at the Senate during the first thirty days of the present session, being from the first Monday in December, 1885, to Jan. 5, 1886, as follows: Judiciary, 62: finance, 71; commerce, 151; public lands, 52: territories, 4; Indian affairs, 16; postoffices, 278; foreign relations, 3; prasions, 6.

The Issue in the Cabinet.

The principal topic of discussion at the Cabinet meeting yesterday was the action of the Republican senatorial caucus in regard to the matter of the suspensions and appointments to office. A general interchange of views was had, but no decisive action was taken. It is understood, however, that it was agreed that no intimation shall be given as to what action may be taken by the administration in this regard until the question is officially brought to the notice of the Executive.

The House of Mercy.

innumerable. It appears to have been in respect of requests to them, an independent and co-ordinate branch of the government, they were under a constitutional duty and obligation to furnish to either house the papers called for, unless, as has happened in very recent histances, when the request was coupled with an appeal to the discretim of the President in respect of the danger of publicity to send the papers, if, in his judgment, it should not be incompatible with the public welfare. Even in times of the highest party excitement and stress, as in 1826 and 1844, it did not seem to recur to the Chief Executive of the United States that it was possible that any official facts or information existing either in the departments, created by law, or within his own possession, could, except as before stated, be withheld from either of the houses of Congress, although such facts or information sensiting either in the departments of the involved very intricate and delicate matters of foreign affairs, as well as semetimes two lower and conduct of officers connected with the administration of affairs. An instance of this character occurring in 1826 is cited, when the Senate was considering whether the United States should be represented in the congress of Panama. In this instance the President ployed.

Missionaries Abused in China-Rear Admiral Davis, of the Atlantic squad-ron, has made a report from Hong Kong in which he says: On the 6th Instant reports were received at Hong Kong of disturbances at Chinkiang, in which missionaries were grossly abused by Chinese mobs. The presence of a man-of-war was requested. It seems that a nob- of workness went to the houses of two American missionaries and took thom out by farce, and having bound them hand and fost, took them to the local magistrate, who immediately released them. Other assaults were committed on missionaries about the same time, causing considerable excitement in the town. The trouble was caused by the refusal of the missionaries to comply with the domains made by the contractor for the buildings erected for them. received at Hong Kong of disturbances at mine what should be considered in open session.

After citing other instances of a similar character, it is stated that President Tyler, during his administration, sent a message to the Senate, in which he said, referring to a call for information which had been made on the Secretaries of War and Navy: "While I cannot recognize this call thus made on the head of the department as consistent to the constitutional rights of the Senate when acting in its executive capacity, which in such case can only properly hold correspondence with the President of the United States, nevertheless, from an anxious desire to lay before the Senate all such information as may be necessary to enable it with full understanding to act upon any subject which may be before it. I herewith transmit communications which have been made to me by the Secretaries of the War and Navy Departments, in full answer to the resolution of the Senate." In giving this Instance, the report observes that it will be seen that there was no intimation of a denight of either house of Congress in the exercise of its general jurisdiction to have knowledge of papers in and acts of a department of the government, but only a claim that, when such papers are wanted in the "executive capacity" of the Senate, they ought to be called for from the President direct.

Commenting upon the reply of President Tyler, the report declares it to be too clear for argument that whether the Senate chooses to conduct its business with closed doors, or open doors, is a matter for its consideration, and can have no relation to the obligation of the executive departments of the government to respond to its call for papers or information.

Many other instances similar to those related are given by the committee, and the report continues. The committee feels safe in stating from the research it has made that the course of the government has been constant and continuous and unchanged from the beginning antil now, and that, in its belief, no instance within the principle and limitation stated has occurred, in which calls for official papers and files addressed either to the President in the form of requests, or to the head of departments in the The New Base Ball Grounds, The new grounds of the Washington National Base Ball Club, on North Capitol street, becalls for official papers and files addressed either to the President in the form of requests, or to the head of departments in the form of commands which have not been compiled with. But it has sometimes happened where the request to the President was merely a conditioned one, leaving it to his discretion whether the papers should be communicated or not, that they have not been communicated. It would seem to be needless, the report says, to array further precedents out of the mass that exists in the journals of both houses, covering probably every year of the existence of the government. The practical construction of the constitution in these respects by all branches of the government for so long a period would seem upon acknowledged principles to settle what are the rights and powers of the two houses of Congress in the exercise of their respective duties, covering every branch of the operations of the government, and it is submitted with confidence that such rights and powers are indispensable to the discharge of their duties, and do not infringe any right of the Executive, and that it does not belong to either heals of departments, or the President himself, to take into consideration any supposed motives or purposes that either house may have in calling tween F and G streets, are being graded. The two disputants grew so carnest that all others dropped the questions which had come up out of the original subject of marriage, and gave them their attention, applicating each as they scored a point. Their ideas were entirely at variance, and seeing no prospect of an early ending of the discussion, a wagglah friend suggested a lunch for the party, excepting the young lady and gentleman, who were to have none until they found their ideas agreeing upon some well-known and important question.
